Dear Sir:

WE, Richard McNally, Peter J. McNally and George Driscoll, are the named inventors in the above-identified application.

We conceived and made the invention in this country prior to September 1, 1997.

A record of our invention is attached herewith. The redacted portion is a date prior to September 1, 1997.

We hereby declare that all statements made herein of our own knowledge are true and that all statements made on information and belief are believed to be true; and further that the statements were made with the knowledge that willful false statements and the like so made are punishable by fine or imprisonment, or both under Section 1001 of Title 18 of the United States Code and that such willful false statements may jeopardize the validity of the application or any patent issuing thereon.

Respectfully submitted,

How Game at a Glance™ Works

A run is indicated by a solid line segment, a pass or kick by a dashed line segment, a penalty by a dotted line segment. The number at the midpoint or end of a line segment representing an individual play is that of the player who ran with the ball, caught it on the fly, kicked it, or punched it.

All plays are represented as if they had been executed in a straight line. The beginning and end points of the vast majority of plays are indicated by a short hatch mark, or an angle in the "drive line" of which they are components. A "drive line" represents the entirety of a given possession and is formed by the end-to-end consolidation of all the line segments of which it is constituted, as above. Other symbols signifying the beginning or end of a play include those for an initial spot, a first down, or a score.

To facilitate comparison of each team's drive lines over the course of the game (1) the direction in which each team advances remains the same from the beginning of the game to the end, and (2) the majority of plays are represented as if they had been executed in a straight line forward or backward.

Line segments drawn on a diagonal appear so only to prevent overlapping. Incomplete passes and plays that neither gain nor lose yards are represented by a short line segment perpendicular to the drive line. All passes are thrown by starting quarterback unless indicated otherwise. When a player other than the starting quarterback throws a pass, the thrower's number is indicated at or near the midpoint of the line segment representing the play, followed by the receiver's and receiver's name separated by a hyphen. Penalties declined and receivers who drop passes are not indicated in most cases. Yards of all plays are approximate. Flight of the ball on kickoffs, punts, missed field goals and punts depicted by a solid line.

A run is indicated by a solid line segment, a pass or kick by a dashed line segment, a penalty by a dotted line segment. The numbers at the endpoints of each line segment represent an individual play if that is the player who has it with the ball, caught it on the fly, kicked it, or passed it.

All plays are represented as if they had been executed in a straight line. The beginning and end points of the vast majority of plays are indicated by a short black mark across or on angle to the "drive line" of which they are components. A "drive line" represents the continuity of a given possession and is formed by the end-to-end continuation of all the line segments of which it is constituted, as above. Other symbols separating the beginning or end of a play include those for an end of play, a first down, or a score.

To facilitate comparison of each team's drive lines over the course of the game, (1) the direction in which each team advances remains the same from the beginning of the game to the end, and (2) the majority of plays are represented as if they had been executed in a straight line forward or backward.

Line segments start on a diagonal, represent 20 yards over the course of overlapping, incomplete passes and plays that neither gain nor lose yards are represented by a short line segment perpendicular to the drive line.

All passes are thrown by starting quarterback unless indicated otherwise. When a player other than the starting quarterback throws a pass, the thrower's number is indicated at or near the midpoint of the line segment representing the play, followed by the receiver's name and separated from it by a hyphen. Players declined and receivers who drop passes are not indicated in these cases. Yardsage of the play is approximately eight of the ball on kickoffs. Firsts, missed field goals not shown. Return of kicks and punts depicted by a solid line.
